INTRODUCTION

Digital communities and social media platforms provide important vehicles to express ourselves, find information, and communicate with one another. This is also true for individuals in distress who are potentially suicidal. Too often their posts go unnoticed or not responded to. There are compelling reasons for social media companies to establish digital policies that will reduce the risk of suicide for these individuals as well as mitigate risk for the company. Not only will it save lives, it is the socially responsible thing to do.

The “Support for Suicidal Individuals on Social and Digital Media” free toolkit was developed by the staff of the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline to help digital community managers and social media platforms establish safety policies for helping individuals in suicidal crisis.

This toolkit is designed to help community managers understand:

- What to look for concerning suicidal content in an online community.
- When to respond to community members who have made statements related to suicide.
- How to approach situations with at-risk individuals so that a community member can be connected to the appropriate resources.

The guidelines listed within this toolkit are free to use. They are informed by best practices established by the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline and Vibrant Emotional Health. For those interested in building a more customized or expansive set of safety policies and support resources, Vibrant Emotional Health experts are available to provide consultative services. WHY ESTABLISH DIGITAL POLICIES FOR THOSE AT SUICIDAL RISK?

Suicide is a LEADING cause of death in the United States

Suicide is a national public health crisis

SUICIDE IS THE 10TH LEADING CAUSE OF DEATH FOR ADULTS

AND IS THE 2ND LEADING CAUSE OF DEATH FOR INDIVIDUALS AGE 15-34 YEARS

We can all take action to prevent suicide and provide support.

Despite these concerning numbers, suicide is preventable. With the right resources and intervention, individuals can find help or learn how to provide support to others, potentially saving lives.

The majority of Americans socialize or find resources online.

The Pew Research Center finds that nearly 84 percent of adult Americans use the internet,² with 65 percent of adults using at least one social networking site.³ Online communities and social media platforms are a large component of an individual's internet experience.

With the progression of social-minded technology, more people are reaching out for help in online communities and on social media. Creating a process for someone to reach out and find support online makes it possible for an individual to get help when they need it most.

HOW TO IDENTIFY SOMEONE AT RISK FOR SUICIDE ONLINE

One of the first hurdles to cross in establishing a process for suicidal community members is one of identification. How do you know if someone may be in suicidal crisis?

People often express one or more warning signs before attempting suicide. In general, a person expressing one or more of the following warning signs in a comment, message, profile, or post online may be considering suicide:

- Talking about wanting to die or kill oneself
- Expressing the desire to kill or injure themselves
- Looking for information about methods of suicide
- Talking about feeling hopeless or having no reason to live
- Talking about feeling trapped or in unbearable pain
- Talking about being a burden to others (“People are better off without me”)
- Increasing the use of alcohol or drugs
- Acting anxious or agitated; behaving recklessly
- Withdrawing or feeling isolated
- Showing rage or talking about seeking revenge
- Displaying extreme mood swings
- Talking about wishing to harm themselves
- Expressing a heightened fixation with death or violence

HOW TO IDENTIFY SOMEONE AT RISK FOR SUICIDE ONLINE

Examples of a community post from someone who may be at-risk:

- “Hi, I really need some help, can someone please contact me.”
- “My daughter has fibromyalgia and the treatment alone costs too much for us to keep up with everything else. It’s become a full-time job to take care of her and I don’t know how I can keep going on like this. I feel hopeless with all of this and don’t know how I can keep going.”
- “My 15-year-old son has been texting one of his friends and he has been having what appears to be thoughts of suicide. What should I do?”
- “I’ve been really depressed lately and I don’t know how to fix this. I have been thinking about suicide lately, my grandfather committed suicide 10 years ago. I’m so scared about all of this.”

Risk factors are characteristics that may make it more likely that an individual will consider or attempt suicide. However, they can’t cause or predict an attempt. If any of the following risk factors are expressed in conjunction with the above warning signs, this person may be at considerable risk of suicide:

- Stressful life events such as the death of a loved one, divorce, or job loss.
- Prolonged stress factors such as harassment, bullying, social humiliation, relationship problems, or unemployment.
- Easy access to lethal methods including firearms or drugs.
- Prior suicide attempt(s) and/or prolonged history of self-harming behaviors.
- Barriers to accessing health care and treatment.
- Social isolation and/or alienation.

These risk factors and warning signs can provide helpful guideposts in determining which individuals in your digital community may be considering suicide or in suicidal crisis and would benefit from your platform’s support resources, a local crisis center’s intervention, or the Lifeline.

THE EXCEPTION TO ALL RULES: IMMINENT RISK

Regardless of protocols, warning signs, or risk factors, there may be posts, profile details, or comments that may indicate a need for immediate action outside of your community's resources. Imminent risk is a term used to define a situation in which an individual is at immediate risk of harming themselves or another person.

To decide whether a person is at imminent risk of harming themselves or others, look for three distinct variables: plan (how), date/time (when) and/or place (where). If the individual identifies a specific method of suicide (the plan) and/or indicates a specific day or time in which they will carry out this method (the timeline), and/or states where he/she wishes to attempt suicide, then that individual is likely at imminent risk of suicide.

Examples of a community post from someone who may be at imminent risk:

- "I GIVE UP. Save your thoughts, I'm killing myself later tonight."
- "I have no one, I'm completely done and I'm numb. I have NO purpose. I'm just wondering what is most efficient to end it, but I think I'm going to use my gun tonight because it should be painless. I'll be home alone, so I have plenty of time to do it."
- I'm going to die by the end of tomorrow. I have a plan but I wanted to say goodbye to all of you before I do it."

In situations where a person is perceived to be at imminent risk of harming themselves or others, it is imperative to connect that individual to emergency services or 911 for immediate assistance. Local emergency services are the fastest way to help a person who is at imminent risk of suicide. Other resources or protocols may be inappropriate during this situation and should not be applied.

It will also be important to share within your community a procedure on how community members can reach out to emergency services if they come across other members who are at imminent risk of harming themselves or another person. Within these guidelines, important information to share with 911 or other emergency services should include:

- As much information as is possible about the person at risk (including name, current address or whereabouts, telephone number, or other mode of contact).
- The nature of the emergency, including information about what the person posted, behavior or actions about to be taken or in the process of being taken, how the caller learned about the emergency (what website, post, chat forum was found).
- You (or the caller's) name, location, and relationship with the digital community.
- Any other information that may be relevant to the situation.

HOW TO ENGAGE AN INDIVIDUAL IN CRISIS ONLINE

If you have identified an individual that is at risk of suicide or in suicidal crisis but doesn't seem to be at imminent risk, research suggests that the community moderator reach out to that individual directly, through a set of clear processes established by and best suited to the needs of your platform or community.

There are four factors to consider when developing your community's guidelines regarding engagement with at-risk individuals online:

- 1 Always consider a post about suicide to be serious and genuine.
While we can imagine instances where a statement could be disingenuous or a joke, it is absolutely important to err on the side of caution and to recognize any concerning posts as an honest and true expression of suicidal crisis.
- 2 Develop a system of monitoring and responding to community members in a timely, uniform, and unbiased manner.
Only offering a response to certain posters or with irregular frequency may come across as disengaged or insincere to your community members, while also raising the possibility that individuals in need of support may go unanswered.
- 3 Craft responses that are sensitive to the situation, yet realistic about your ability to support an at-risk individual. It is not your responsibility to provide total support for community members who are experiencing thoughts of suicide. Instead, aim to connect people to appropriate support services during a time of crisis.
- 4 Keep in mind the exception to all rules: imminent risk.
If, in the course of communicating with an individual, you discover that this person is at imminent risk of suicide, reach out to emergency services immediately. Similarly, if another user reports to you that they have found a post that shows another user may be at imminent risk, have a procedure in place to manage the situation.

While we encourage active moderation and response online, we do not encourage community managers to take on the role of mental health care professionals. All engagement with an at-risk individual should be designed to provide appropriate support while connecting that individual to mental health or crisis resources like the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline, your local crisis center, or other local mental health providers. You can use the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services (SAMHSA) treatment services locator to find resources in your area (See Resource List – U.S.-Based).

If, while engaging with an at-risk individual, you believe that the person may actually be at imminent risk of suicide, call 911 or other local emergency services for immediate assistance. Local emergency services are the fastest way to help a person who is at imminent risk. Other resources or protocols may be inappropriate during this situation and should not be applied.

Sample responses to a community post, message or comment:

- “We are so sorry about the struggles you are going through and we want to help. Please call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline: 1-800-273-TALK. The call is free and confidential, and crisis workers are there 24/7 to assist you.”
- “It sounds like you are having a really difficult time right now. If you need a little extra emotional support, please call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline: 1-800-273-TALK. The call is free and confidential, and crisis workers are there 24/7 to assist you. The Lifeline is there for everyone.”
- “I am sorry to hear you are feeling so alone right now but hurting yourself is never the answer. There is hope and help available. Please call the Lifeline at 1-800-273-TALK (8255) or visit them online at suicidepreventionlifeline.org. They are here for you 24/7/365.”
- “Thank you for reaching out to us. We’re sorry to hear you are in so much emotional pain right now. The National Suicide Prevention Lifeline’s crisis counselors are here for you any time at 1-800-273-TALK (8255). The call is free and confidential.”
- “Thank you for reaching out to us during such a difficult time. We want to make sure you are supported. Please visit suicidepreventionlifeline.org for resources and 24/7 help.”

There may be times when a community member wishes to continue to directly engage with you for support beyond what you or your community feel appropriate providing. During instances of repeated engagement, continue to emphasize the importance of having the individual connect with the Lifeline, your local crisis center, or other mental health resources.

Providing guidance on how community members can support users they learn are at imminent risk for suicide will create a safer and more supportive community as a whole. Feel free to use the information in the previous section as a starting point for developing guidelines on how community managers and users can assist someone who is needing immediate support. For consultation or further assistance on developing these guidelines, write to Vibrant Emotional Health’s Communications team at communications@vibrant.org, with the subject line “Social Media Suicide Prevention” to schedule an in-depth consultation.

HOW TO BUILD A DIGITAL SAFETY RESOURCE BANK

While you can definitely provide relevant third-party information and mental health resources on an as-needed basis when engaging with those in suicidal crisis, you may want to consider creating a bank of resources for your own organization or social media platform.

A single web page on your website or a designated area in your community forum can serve as a way to share a variety of different resources your community may find helpful in a single easy-to-find location. Having this page in a location that you can easily edit also allows you to adjust and expand that resource bank as your community grows. You can add custom messaging or information to your resource bank that may not be easily accessible through third-party resources.

There are four factors to consider and incorporate when creating a digital safety resource bank:

- 1 A resource bank is not a replacement for crisis services. Crisis intervention services offer trained counselors to those in need of support. A list of digital safety resources is an informational supplement to crisis counseling, and information on local or national crisis counseling services should be available in any resource bank.
- 2 Stick to reputable resources and provide the most recent information. Try to provide information that comes from evidence-based or verified sources, and establish a method of regularly checking the veracity of information, cleaning up broken links, and removing outdated sources.
- 3 Integrate your resource bank throughout your website or platform, as well as your engagement messaging. Make sure this list of resources can be easily found in your navigation, menu, or search results, and share it when you engage with community members.
- 4 Keep in mind the exception to all rules: imminent risk. Include the methods of identifying imminent risk in your resource bank, and encourage your community members to learn them and contact emergency services when necessary. Provide a space to share with community members how your organization will review and respond to persons at imminent risk, so that community administrators and the community understand the process for supporting those at imminent risk.

You do not have to limit yourself to information concerning suicide prevention. As your community grows, you may identify other needs, mental health or otherwise, and can provide resources to address those needs through your resource bank.

ADDITIONAL SERVICES

The “Support for Suicidal Individuals on Social and Digital Media” free toolkit is meant to serve as a foundation on which to build digital suicide prevention policies and strategies and help save lives. But every organization, platform, and community is unique, and this kit cannot address every challenge that may develop.

Vibrant Emotional Health and The National Suicide Prevention Lifeline have worked with multiple social media platforms and organizations to craft supportive and effective suicide prevention strategies that work best for their communities. Our digital best practices and consultations have influenced safety policy at Facebook, Google, Twitter, and more.

If you or your organization are interested in a more hands-on approach to crafting suicide prevention policy, are interested in receiving assistance on building a more safe and supportive community, or if you would like to explore more innovative strategies in digital suicide prevention, write to Kathryn Salisbury, Executive Vice President of Strategy and Business Development, Vibrant Emotional Health, at ksalisbury@vibrant.org with the subject line “Social Media Suicide Prevention” to schedule an in-depth consultation.

KEY TERMS

This list identifies common terms used in the suicide prevention and mental health fields.

Crisis: A situation or period of time whereby an individual experiences intense, overwhelming negative thoughts and feelings that outstrip his/her current ability to positively cope with the situation. By nature, crises are transient; if symptoms related to the crisis remain stable over time, they are more accurately described as a “disorder.”

Imminent Risk: A situation wherein a person is perceived to be in immediate danger of harming themselves (“imminent risk to self” e.g. suicide) or someone else. (“Imminent risk to others”).

Intentional Self-Harm: Purposefully self-inflicted poisoning or injury.

Non-fatal: Not causing death.

Risk Factors: Factors that make it more likely that individuals will develop a disorder and/or experience health or behavioral health crises; risk factors may encompass biological, psychological, or social factors in the individual, family, and environment.

Self-Harm or Self-Injury: injury or poisoning resulting from an intentional, deliberate violent act inflicted on oneself. This category may include suicide, suicide attempt, and other intentional self-harm (cutting, etc.).

Suicidal Behavior: Spectrum of actions undertaken by a person with the intent of killing one’s self (“suicide attempts”).

Suicidal Ideation: Thoughts of engaging in suicide-related behavior. A wish or desire to die typically motivated by overwhelming psychic pain.

Suicidal Intent: There is evidence that, at the same time of injury, the individual intended to kill self or wished to die, and that the individual understood the probable consequences of his or her actions.

Suicide Attempt: A potentially self-injurious behavior with a nonfatal outcome, for which there is evidence that the person intended to kill himself or herself; a suicide attempt may or may not result in injuries.

Suicidal Plan: An effort to organize actions—including collecting items (lethal means), determining a time and place—which are intended to result in one’s death by suicide.
